I had wondered about his sincerity in the Gospel once or twice too.
Simply because he is rather nervous and it's hard for him to settle down to one thing for any great length of time.
(Unless it's maybe me.)

I asked him about joining the church, too. He took Holy Communion in the Catholic Church and went to a Catholic school for two years when he was a child.

About the church, he said, "I had studied a lot about a lot of religions, and when I found this one I just knew it was right. It's like grabbing at straws, trying to find one to hold to. Every time you get ahold of one and start to look at it it falls apart and turns to dust in your hands. Then finally you find one that doesn't fall apart. One that holds together and gets stronger and closer bound the longer you examine it. When you find that you know that's it, and that you're always going to hang on to it."
